Team reflection week 9 - RCA CT-100

Social Contract and Effort

- your social contract (Links to an external site.), i.e., the rules that define how you work together as a team, how it influenced your work, and how it evolved during the project (this means, of course, you should create one in the first week and continuously update it when the need arrives)
There is a survey (Links to an external site.) you can use for evaluating how the team is perceiving the process and if it is used by several teams it will also help you to assess if your team is following a general pattern or not.

The social contract was mutually created in the beginning of the process and has been with us through the entire project. However, we have fortunately not had any situation where we have been forced to use it.

Our workflow has developed step by step through the whole project, e.g. by changing structure in Trello and git and having daily standups three times a week. This has been important changes which have felt more and more natural to work with and they have not caused much harm after there initial implementation. Luckily, it seems most of our changes have come to the better, for all persons within the group as well. This as well as an understanding of each other and each other's parts of the project has held conflicts at bay.
